- Application deadline: January 2022
- Programme start: August 2022

Programme overview

The international Master in Visual Culture is a two-year interdisciplinary programme focusing on understanding the vital importance of images and other visual expressions in past and present societies and cultures. In recognition of the complexity that images and pictures embody, we welcome students from different visual and aesthetic disciplines (Art History, Visual Anthropology, Design Studies, Film Studies, Musicology etc.) in order to create a broad programme that prepares students for research.

The Master's programme offers students a unique combination of theoretical frameworks and analytical methods pertaining to a wide range of visual phenomena in today's image-saturated society. Throughout the programme, students will learn to critically analyse and interpret a comprehensive flora of texts and images in order to question and discuss how visibility is shaped. Visibility here means the social construction of vision but also the visual construction of society. On the programme, visibility is studied from a critical and intermedial perspective. Aspects such as power, history, environment, social relations, gender and ethnicity are central.

Furthermore, the role of visual communication is analysed in art, science and in popular and mass media, when it comes to portraying and shaping the major issues of life and society. The programme covers a wide range of materials – design objects, architecture and urban environments; painting, photography and sculpture; film, video and television; social media – in various contexts, such as art, entertainment, the natural sciences and the political sector, in relation to topical issues like biomedicine, social justice, or climate change.

Features of the programme and learning outcomes:

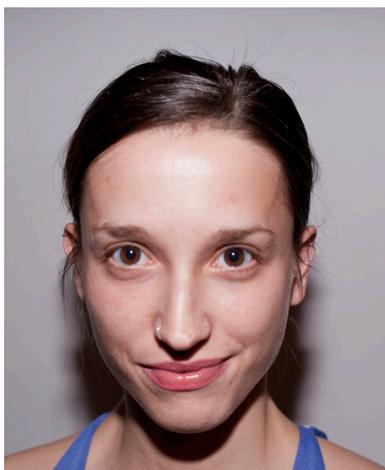

- Qualitative and quantitative methods used in image analysis and data collection
- An understanding of contemporary theories about vision, visibility and images in society
- An understanding of the historical dimension of visibility
- Research design and formulation of project proposals
- Knowledge and practical experience of fieldwork
- Knowledge and practical experience of writing different academic genres
- Extensive experience of peer reviewing fellow students' work, both verbally and in writing

Career prospects

After completing the programme, you will be able to actively mediate your knowledge about visual culture, thereby satisfying society's need for critical analysis. Future career prospects include academic teaching and research as well as work within cultural administration and production,

“There is a kind of misunderstanding that visual culture is a version of art history. I have realised that it's not. It deals with a lot of technological and sociological issues. After the Master's, I have become more aware of the visual construction of our surroundings. I think Visual Culture is a programme for those who are interested in media, aesthetics, art history and representation. The Master's programme was a very good introduction to academic life.”

Tina Bitouni from Greece

planning and shaping of public space, cultural journalism/criticism, consultancy in the entertainment and experience industry, etc.
