- Lund Campus
- Application deadline: January 2023
- Programme start: August 2023

PROGRAMME OVERVIEW

The Bachelor's programme in Development Studies is interdisciplinary and focuses on economic, social and political processes and their links to development cooperation. The aim is to provide the knowledge needed in order to critically examine and understand the preconditions for, and process of, development.

The programme draws on the scientific traditions from four different disciplines – sociology, political science, human geography and economic history.

PROGRAMME MODULES/COURSES

The programme comprises a total of 180 credits divided over three years. The courses in the first and third years are compulsory for the programme.

The first year gives an introduction to historical, geographical and methodological issues in development studies and is divided into four fifteen-credit courses. The first semester serves as an introduction to development studies. It gives an historical background, which looks at the causes behind development and under-development. The semester also reviews contemporary issues in the social and political transformation of the developing world. During this semester, the implementation of development policy, as well as aid issues are highlighted. The second semester gives a more detailed and critical account of development theory, and also covers methodological issues from both quantitative and qualitative perspectives.

The second year gives the students the possibility to choose courses offered by the four departments involved in the programme. In order to be eligible for a Degree of Bachelor of Science a minimum of 30 credits must be completed within one of these departments during the second year. Students will also study elective courses equaling another 30 credits. This is a possibility to either further specialize within their chosen major or broaden their degree.

The third year focuses on practical aspects and will be carried out in collaboration with potential employers such as NGOs, government agencies, and private companies active in the developing world. The first semester covers the practical features of development cooperation and research. The final semester presents an opportunity to do field work or an internship with one of the aforementioned partners. The programme concludes with a 15 credit bachelor's thesis.

Courses within the programme are:

Year one

- UTVC21: Development and under-development in a historical perspective, the economic, social and political transformation of the third world, 15 credits
- UTVC22: Development policy in practise, 15 credits
- UTVC23: Development theory, 15 credits
- UTVC24: Research methods - an introduction, 15 credits

Year two

- 30 credits within the chosen major subject (economic history, human geography, political science or sociology)
- Elective courses up to 30 credits.

Year three

- UTVC25: Development cooperation in practice, 15 credits
- UTVC36: Research methods in developing contexts, 15 credits
- Fieldwork/internship or literature studies, 15 credits
- Independent project in the chosen major subject, 15 credits

CAREER PROSPECTS

The programme provides students with the background knowledge needed to work in development-related fields. Students also gain a critical social science approach that provides preparation for graduate and doctoral studies and proves valuable in various professions within government agencies, private firms and NGOs.
